Tobias Freund is responsible for a sickeningly cool slew of purist techno and house over the last couple of years from the awesome 'street knowledge' 12" for logistic through to his collabs with Villalobos as the Odd Machine and as part of .NSI with Max Loderbauer. The common theme running through all of these releases has been Freund's intuitive and purist approach to dancefloor minimalism, imbuing his tracks with a funky and soulful sensibility rarely found elsewhere within the scene, this can be clearly heard on his latest transmission for Wagon repair 'I can't fight the feeling'. The title track revolves around a lush female vocal sample lending an authentic deep house vibe which when coupled with the classicly executed Detroit shuffle rhythms leaves us with a bit of a killer tune. 'Go' on the flipside harks back to the more abstract rhythmic strains of his .NSI project with an extended DJ tool perching on the edge of a killer rhythm but requiring slick mixing skills to work the magic out. Also included are two wicked techno cuts in 'beat study part one & two' similar to his 'Street knowledge' 12" with mean synthlines and a percolating funk flavour that will work any floor to the bone. Tobias Freund is one of a trusted handful of artists who really warrants some serious attention with every new project and release, don't miss out.
